The Shoemaker. The shoemaker sat amid wax and leather,

With lapstone over his knee, Where snug in his shop, he defied all weather, Drawing his quarters and soles together, A happy old man was he.

This happy old man was so wise and knowing, The worth of his time he well knew; He bristled his ends, and kept them going, He felt to each moment a stitch was owing, Until he got round the shoe.

Of every deed his wax was sealing-The closing was firm and fast; The prick of his awl ne'er caused a feeling Of pain to the toer, and his skill in heeling Was perfect and true to the last.

Whenever you gave him a foot to measure, With gentle and skillful hand He took its proportions with looks of pleasure, As if you were giving the costlicst treasure, Or dubbing him lord of the land.

And many a one did he save from getting A fever, or cold, or cough;

And many a foot did he save from wetting, When whether in water or snow 'twas setting, His shoeing would keep them off. When he had done with his making and mending,

With hope and a peaceful breast, Resigning his awl as his thread was ending, He passed from his bench to the grave descending, As high as a king to rest.

Babylonish Vestiges in Modern Languages. Sir Heary Rawlinson, the Oriental explorer, lectured at the Scriptural Museum, London, lately, on recent Oriental discoveries in relation to the bible. In the course of his lecture he said :

The whole country of Assyria had been excavated in the course of his researches, and cylinders, tablets and prisms had been extracted from the ruins of the ancient temples, filled with inscriptions, which had now been deciphered, and in many instances, they served not only to verify Scripture, but to throw light upon and explain passages which had hitherto been obscure. It apand belonged to the family of Ham. NEW YORK CITY ACCOUNTS .- The New York way of doing things affords an interesting study. Every once in a while some city official comes out with a long report, exposing frauds of the most extensive character, showing how the people are cheated, to a certain degree who the cheats are, and to a less definite degree the amount of the a coward .- Valley Yeoman. cheatings. The papers all comment upon the exposure with infinite zest, perhaps for two mornings in succession, then the whole matter is forgotten till another aspiring officer takes his turn in the exposing line, and perhaps exposes the exposer. Now, however, a sort of "grand combination" report has been commenced-for it is expected that it will take a year to finish the task. The Joint Committee on Accounts fill the papers with the details of their researches. They are " grand, gloomy and peculiar." In one case, for instance, where two sets of books ought to agree, the committee find a difference of only $931,935. In the department of arrears they find flems amounting to $5000 marked as unpaid assessments, which have been paid. The sum total of unpaid assessments on the 1st of January last is put down at near six millions of dollars; but how near this is to the mark they cannot tell until the work is finished. An owner on the street had $62,990 damages awarded him; yet the receipt-book shows his awards were $104,989; while the wardens footed Marlborough, passing the gate of the Tower, after up the sums issued at $62,012. Junior. The eight men concerned in the Junior tragedy were placed on board that vessel on Saturday afternoon. They left Darlinghurst Gaol between 2 and 3 p. m., in the prison van, guarded by a detachment of the mounted police, and were taken to Lady Macquarie's Chair, where a boat was in readiness to receive them. From this point they were conveyed to the Junior, in charge of Captain M'Lerie, Inspector-General of Police, and troops, accompanied by Mr. North, the Water Police Magistrate, and Mr. Brennan, Sheriff. They were placed in their cells immediately on their embarkation, and left under the surveillance of Mr. Reynolds, superintendent, and the five persons who complete the guard. The vessel sailed for Boston yesterday morning, under the command of Captain Gardiner; and Mr. Lord who it will be recollected received a wound on the night of the mutiny, accompanied the ship as second officer. Mr. Nelson Provost, the first mate of the Junior, left this colony, for Boston, some days since, in the American ship Undus. On the mutineers finding that they were to be heavily ironed, some of them lost courage, and wept bitterly. Plummer, the ringleader, observing that the leg-irons were to be rivetted and clenched, complained that in the event of the vessel being wrecked, they would have no chance of saving their lives. The mutineers were divested of their clothing, and dressed in the garb of convicts. On board the Junior eight strong cells have been erected for their reception-four on each side. These cells are built between-decks, and, while every attention has been paid to their cleanliness and comfort, their perfect security has been ensured by means of strong bars, bolts, and doors studded with nails. Full authority has been vested in Captain Gardiner as to the nature of punishment to be inflicted in case of any refractory conduct on the part of the mutineers. So long as their behaviour is orderly they will daily receive any indulgence compatible with their condition, including full diet from the cabin table, and a sufficiency of exercise on deck. The six guardsmen will be known by a badge on their dress, to render them distinguishable at all hours from the remainder of the ship's company. We have

At a convention of clergymen, not long since, it was proposed by one of the members, after they had dined, that each should entertain the company with some remarks. Among the rest, one drew upon his fancy, and related a dream. In his dream he went to heaven, and he described the golden streets, the river of life, etc., etc. As he concluded, one of the divines, who was somewhat noted for his penurious and money saving habits, stepped up to the narrator and inquired jocosely,

"Well, did you see anything of me in your dream? 16
